Comments: Trees are our life blood as humans we get our oxygen from them, we need them. However, our society has evolved or more like regressed through our dependence on lumber and logging. Being from a large suburb of Boston I haven't been surrounded by trees like I have been here in Vermont. Being engulfed by trees has first allowed me to breathe cleaner air as well as grow a huge appreciation for trees and what they do for our eco-system. But besides all of the benefits that the trees provide, the one negative that it provides our society is a means to continue its capitalistic practice of deforestation and replanting that will eventually make trees few and far to come by. Although there is nothing that I can do is plea for the logging of the telephone gap to stop so that the community of Vermont can stay true to itself and its beauty.
