

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/23/2023 4:39:05 AM

First name: Daniel

Last name: Abert

Organization:

Title:

Comments: A couple quick suggestions off the top of my head.

Suggest using a trials like reference and friendly completion to different skills area. The friendly competition within the area that is based on who can do the sections with the least "dabs" Then show an average skill level for the amount of dabs to complete the sections, or whole course. This will also give those using the skills training area a reference to build from based on their score.

Also, for crossing logs, it's good to dab and know who's to weight your peg with one foot and then step on the log and maneuver the bike over. This is a great technique for riders who can't yet clear logs, or for larger logs, and this higher off the ground or on a slope. A visual of the weighted foot peg stance with explanation of the peg weighting at the obstacle could be very beneficial.