Comments: I started riding dirt bikes in areas managed by the USFS and BLM in 2006, and it has become a passion of mine ever since. Having experienced the skills training areas in the Peach Valley OHV location near Montrose, CO, I have seen the benefits this type of area can provide for riders and the demand for its use. The Colorado Front Range doesn't have anything similar available currently, and the Rampart Range area is perfectly located for the most riders to benefit. If an area designated for skills training and related education is provided, it prevents user-created off-trail riding, which reduces negative impact to the environment as well as the chances of injuries/difficult search & rescue operations.
