Comments: Regarding the Kaniksu Winter Rec draft environmental assessment: the long and the short of it is that OSV recreational users already disregard the rules in the areas that they have access to. Why on earth would should we open up additional land (with endangered and threatened species that have declined significantly in the past quarter century) when the access that they currently enjoy is abused and disrespected? The laws for the current areas are not being enforced, so it seems clear that there would be no way to enforce future access either. As a parent of children, this makes no sense to me. If one of my kids took my truck for a drive without my permission, I would NOT give them the keys and add them to my insurance and fill up the gas tank for them! This is just common sense. You don't increase privileges for people who abuse them. That the USFS and Fish and Game would support this baffles me. What am I missing here? Is there a kickback? Is someone getting paid off? Please make it make sense.
