Comments: As a previous resident of Taos this proposal of expanding the ski mountain and it's infrastructure is deeply concerning. Not only is the water crisis not being taken seriously, but the ski valley is disrupting the quaintness and quirkiness of the ski mountain that gives the place its unique charm. We are living in a global climate crisis where skiing is going to become more and more of a privilege then it already stands. Instead of expanding resorts with outdated technologies like snow making, we should be considering more advanced ways to continue to enjoy the sport even when the climate might not support it. The amount of disturbance this project will have on the land and on the public access routes outweighs any possible good that will come in the years that follow.
