Comments: I'm selfish.....I go up into the woods in winter to find peace and quiet. Snowmobiles roaring by is not peace and quiet. I suppose it's their forest too.

When I was a younger man I remember getting up in the Wilderness in winter. And finding snowmobile tracks. Not all snowmobilers are that way of course, but put a powerful, fun, fast machine tween your legs and arbitrary boundary's don't mean much. Kind of like jet skis, they have a hard time with rules too, but that is not part of this. Or ATV's for that matter. People get going fast, having fun and thrills, and want to keep pushing things. To places they shouldn't be.

Just curious, do your people ever confront people in places they shouldn't be?? Right tickets?? Is there any enforcement?

Please do what you can to keep over-snow machines out of the woods. Out of the sensitive areas at least. Away from wildlife. And away from me :)
