

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 8/22/2023 4:37:36 PM

First name: Susan

Last name: Rodriguez

Organization:

Title:

Comments: It has become quite apparent through the years, decades, that introducing domestic animals to forest areas, place undo stress on the natural scheme of nature's rhythm. They are not part of the natural regeneration or cycles and therefore are quite harmful to wildlife and their ability to compete in their own natural world. They are an unwelcome inclusion into an already dwindling habitat, making it harder for those animals that are naturally found there to exist at all. And why, so we humans can make money and get fatter. Not a great idea. Not for the wildlife or the grazers.