Comments: Dear USDA Forest Service,

I write to ask that you end the long and damaging system of granting grazing permits for domestic sheep in this high Uintas mountain range. This is part of the nation's Wilderness where your first and highest priority is perpetuating natural conditions, where humans, their works and their domestic livestock do not remain and do not dominate the landscape. The damage domestic sheep herding at these elevations is well documented, causing severe loss of wildlife bighorn sheep and native predators, loss of water quality and more. You have an obligation to end grazing permits here. Sheep ranchers have opportunities for compensation for financial loss. Encourage that. Given that some time to work, then end this damaging practice and allow wilderness conditions to be restored. Thank you.
