Comments: Hello, I am completely opposed to ag before native animals and plants yet once again. When will this end ? It is more often for cattle grazing but this is just as bad since sheep are such destructive eaters. With climate change speeding up even more; allowing these near non-discriminatory grazers to eat plants necessary for a recovering area is fool-hardy. The trees can't hope to replace themselves when they are mowed to the ground or pulled up by the roots. We need more trees to pull more carbon out of air to mitigate more. We simply must or our children and grandchildren will suffer mightily. Wool prices are so low, mutton isn't that popular...allotments aren't fully utilized now - it is time to get serious and look at the future with unblinking eyes and Do The Right Thing for all of us...not just the 'ranchers'...and I say ranchers with sarcasm since they aren't on a ranch...they are on publicly owned lands and we the public deserve our say and consideration also...not just Big Ag and their lobbyists forcing another generation of waste and destruction on us.

What will you tell your children and grandchildren about what you did to help change the trajectory of climate change ? Seriously...what will YOU tell THEM. I know what I will say. I tried every time I could and every way I could be involved. Have you ?
