Comments: For wilderness to be wild, and therefore wilderness, domestic animals must not be allowed to enter except under direct control of packers or equestrains. Plant life has not co-evolved with domestic grazing animals, but with native elk, moose, mule deer, mountain goats, bighorn sheep, and pronghorn. These animals do not need competition in their habitual ranges. Public land should not be offered for grazing of domestic animals; it degrades the land and offers unfair financial advantage to some ranchers.
