Comments: Here we have yet another case of ranchers moving animals into areas where wildlife live and they effects are not good. The case here for me is simple. Wildlife are being evicted or killed for the profits of ranchers. It is certainly bad for native animals and is also bad for the environment as water sources are fouled and that affects visitors. The survival of Bighorn Sheep is severely threatened by the domestic sheep and it is time to stop catering to ranchers who have more than enough money, power, and grazing space. It is time to save wildlife who are already in peril. To kill them for the purposes of ranchers is cruel, human centric, irresponsible, and unethical. Please, save the beings who call the High Uintas Wilderness home. It is called wilderness for a reason.
