Comments: To whom it may concern, Public parks, forests, and all wildlands need a moratorium on private grazing. Herd animals, by nature of domestication, do not migrate obviously. They deplete every resource within a given area before being moved to another, polluting water and soils as they move without giving proper time for natural recovery. Public lands are specifically protected for the benefit of all citizens, not only ranchers. If ranchers were educated to move herds in smaller numbers in a semi-migratory pattern, our lands would be better protected and more able to recover as required for the future. While doing so would escalate costs and require more labor on the part of ranchers, let's remember they now pay next to nothing for grazing rights and are continually disrespecting and destroying lands that were preserved for the wildlife natural to the environment...and for us, the entire taxpaying public
