Comments: Thanks for providing me with this important information about the Unitas. I have visited this ecosystem and it's a valuable and biodiverse habitat. But I have long noticed the detrimental effects of intensive livestock grazing in these headwaters particularly sheep. With Global Warming it's all the more important to protect these sources of pure and abundant water, fresh air, and the natural life community in its own right and for its immense benefits, natural values and ecological services. For this reason I greatly recommend that you eliminate livestock grazing from this wilderness area by adopting the environmentally preferred alternative number 1. This would be a very wise and heroic decision and the ranchers could learn a better less harmful way of life and themselves be much the better for it!
