Comments: I spend quite a lot of time in the Unitas. One can look at territories and immediately know whether sheep have been present. Forage is always dramatically eaten and trampled, there are droppings everywhere, and often there is damage to river banks and other water sources. Since we are building houses on so much land that has traditionally provided forage for wildlife we should be leaving the forage for the wildlife. Supporting a few sheep growing families with taxpayer money is bad fiscally, for the public's land, and for wildlife. It is simply wrong.
