Comments: Dear Ashley, National Forest,

The current grazing level in the High Uinta Wilderness is detrimental to recreation, water quality and most important is disastrous to wildlife habitat. As the US and local population grows and visitation significantly increases it is critical to protect this landscape.

Studies indicate current grazing levels are much too high. It is the responsibility of the Forest Service to protect this resource with management practices supported with science.

Please significantly reduce or eliminate the current sheep grazing practice in the High Uinta Wilderness.

Sincerely,

Natalie Fink
