Comments: This "linear fuel break" effort is seriously misguided.

One wonders who will profit from this? Not the wildlife, not the climate, not the dry land, not the public that enjoys the recreational hiking/biking experience.

Noxious weeds will profit, the contractor who performs the work will profit, and those who choose to build structures in or near the forest may profit. Instead, shouldn't they be paying to maintain fuel-free, fireproof areas of landscaping around their homes and other structures? Or at the least shouldn't they pay for this misguided effort, rather than the public who objects to it?
