Comments: I think the project should proceed as planned. The stocking of trout has really fallen off in general waters over the last several years. As a fisherman the concerns of the paddlers on the dam is a mute point. If it's a safety hazzard to them, they need to stay out of the river. Most of their concerns are how much money they can make guiding trips. As far as delayed harvest streams, there are way too many of them. So many trout are wasted by rough handling of the fish. Most of the people that fishes delayed harvest are only thinking about how many fish they can catch on a given day. They know these streams are stocked heavily and don't care how they handle the fish. A lot of the delayed harvest delayed harvest streams are the best streams to fish and need to be put back in general waters. I would rather see the trout killed by rough handling be consumed by fisherman than by a bunch of raccoons.
