Comments: Please consider that even prescribed burning encapsulates wild life because wild animals don't know which way to run from the fire and are often destroyed in it. This includes birds, fish; every species who have roamed the forests for years. Not sure if herding them out is an option but would be worth considering before commencing the burning.

We used to have forestry personnel and the army corps of engineers that helped clear trees and brush then it was banned; now we are in a crisis and this seems like the lazy, unaccountable way to help sustain the forest that could go very wrong. I would think other alternate options could be put on the table.
