Comments: I am against the Forest Service burning and cutting large swaths of iconic wilderness areas in the Sequoia and Sierra National Forests. I realize that natural fires do play an integral role in the ecosystem and the land actually needs fire in order to sustain and rejuvenate itself. However, human manipulation of it is wrong. It should be done naturally, via lightning strikes, as it has always been done before humans were even a species. Artificially manipulating the environment does not do as good a job as nature can do and leaves places more barren and lifeless than allowing it to unfold through natural processes.

Thank you,
