Comments: Fixed anchors save lives. They allow safe recreation. And unless you know to look for them, they are practically invisible from a hiking trail. I am worried that this policy will result in the removal of fixed anchors, which could place unsuspecting climbers in a very dangerous situation. I also find it worrisome that the policy only allows for fixed anchors when it would replace destruction of the rock. Climbers are generally in universal agreement that chipping the rock is unacceptable, but this policy actually incentivizes it to allow the justification of fixed anchors. This policy is dangerous and counterproductive.
