Comments: Yosemite is the center of the climbing world in California and much of the United States. The NPS USFS draft recreation management directives aim to overturn decades of climbing regulation and precedent. The directives classify fixed anchors-the bolts, pitons, and slings that technical climbers have used to safely ascend and descend technical faces since well before Congress passed the Wilderness Act-as prohibited "installations" in Wilderness areas. If approved, the directives would apply to new and existing anchors. I urge you to deny these new management directives and keep Yosemite as the climbing haven it has always been.
