Comments: As a Coloradan who loves to spontaneously enjoy the state that I was born in - permits that require planning months in advance with no options for later availability is incredibly frustrating. As we've seen with places like the Maroon Bells, all the permits get bought up the moment they're publicly released (many times to people who don't know me up using them or companies who then turn around and try to profit off their permits). Those of us who love to responsibly enjoy the state we pay to live in continually have to fight for outdoor access, and many times don't have the ability to plan months in advance. If a permit system is instituted - it will be the locals and Coloradans that suffer the most.
