Comments: I do not support more days to outfitters. There is not enough monitoring or policing occurring with the current permits that are already issued. I have had many guides that think they own an area and run the general non guided hunters out of areas. You need to consider pulling permits when the general public calls and complains about certain guides or outfitters harassing the public. Put a 3 strikes and your out policy or something that you can hold them accountable to when this happens.

They cut there own trails, put out attractants like salt, and leave cameras and tree stands out year long. The general public is not allowed to cut their own trails neither should they. The outfitters need to show on a map all locations of their tree stands per their permit and make sure they're pulled oand moved every 16 days. I am tired of finding an elk wallow or a man made salt lick with tree stands from a guide up all year. Make them accountable and make a plan to hold them to it and if they don't take the permit away. This way maybe the the outfit owners are forced to weed out the bad guides who give the company a bad name by bullying the public. You need a way to enforce them.
