Comments: Overall, the plan looks reasonable, necessary, and helpful. However, there is one key modification that I suggest. Climbing routes should be grouped into pre-approved areas that comply with regulations regarding wilderness, wildlife, Indian sites, etc. Then, within these pre-approved areas, new anchors would not require individual approval so long as they are installed while complying with the local regulations. Forest Service lands are so vast that the quantity of individual applications for new anchors on single routes would quickly overwhelm the Service's capacity to handle such application.
