Comments: I think that by doing this all you accomplish is making climbing less safe. The the anchors are there because a route is there and if you remove the anchor you leave people who want to climb the route to do it in traditional style which is the least safe way to climb. On top of that, there is very little chance that all the anchors can be reviewed in a timely manner which then leaves climbers in a position where they can't replace bad anchors until they're reviewed and if someone tries to climb on that anchor it could be deadly. Either that or people replace these bad anchors because they don't want people dying and now these people who have done a selfless deed have now broken the law.
