Comments: To whom it concerns,

Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.

Please consider protecting climbers and other precious resources by allowing the placement of bolted anchors. It increases the risk of injury, of needing emergency services in remote locations, of life, of allowing people to find joy and connection to each other and their environment if these new rules are put into place.
