Comments: With the exception of fixed anchors for common, frequently used rappels, I am adamantly against the use of any fixed anchors anywhere in the wilderness areas managed by the Forest Service. Use of fixed anchors spoils the rock and deprecates the climbing experience. As a climber, I would like to experience as closely as possible the challenge, rigor and experience faced on the first ascent and fixed anchors rob that experience. If it cannot be climbed traditionally, it should be admired and appreciated for what it is.
