Comments: Hello! This new potential policy has me concerned enough to be on here commenting. Rock climbing has totally changed my life for the better. Once an addict to several substances, climbing gave me an outlet to escape those negative influences. It's allowed me to become more. It's been a great source of enjoyment and happiness to me, my family, and my friends. My relationships have become richer as a result. Humans have always had a need for adventure and exploration. This looks different now than maybe it did 100 or 200 years ago for the most part, but there are still some of us who like to go out into the wilderness and think just for a moment: "I wonder how many people have been right where I am before. I wonder if I'm the only one." Putting rules in place may damper that spirit, but more likely than not, it will just become a lot more private and hidden. I don't see anything you do putting a halt on people continuing to explore. The question is do you want to help them be safe while they do and do you want them to be able to share about those things. Thank you.
