Comments: Passing these laws will have a huge impact into the climbing community. Many of us needs these routes to sustain mental illness impacted by society and by taking away these places is like taking a gun on peoples souls. Removing or cutting bolts and anchors on climbing routes can pose significant dangers and have various negative implications to the climbing community. These actions will create safety hazards for climbers. It can leave routes unsafe, making it dangerous for climbers who might expect these safety measures to be in place. Another important factor of altering established climbing routes is the fact that it will take away historical documentation from the climbing community.
