Comments: Hello,

I was dismayed to hear about the proposal to ban fixed anchors. I love to support America's National Parks and while I understand the concern around having external equipment in an otherwise "natural" setting, I would argue that the relative impact is small enough to justify their continued use and the pros outweigh the cons.

A lack of bolts won't inhibit climbing, it will just push it back to the fringe and make it more dangerous. Similar to the toilets that are already set up in the parks, these are necessary pieces of infrastructure that are overall net positive for preserving the park.

Best,

Tyzo
