Comments: There are many great regional and national organizations, such as the Access Fund, with which you can work to develop coherent, reasonable, ethical policies that are in alignment with all stakeholders.

Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.
