Comments: I feel as though the protection of old growth forests is very important! The destruction of an old growth forest ruins the ecosystem that is housed in these forests, which, even if humans replace the trees, doesn't return the same as how it was before. The brush becomes thinner and animals that once lived there would have to re-establish their population if they're able to at all.

I think protecting old growth forests is the right move and logging should be restricted to areas with newer growth.
