Comments: I understand the need for management of climbing on public lands. I also value preserving our public lands for future generations of outdoorsman. A management system over climbing anchor maintenance is a reasonable solution. After seeing the closure of a significant portion of the climbing routes at Massacre Rocks I do not like the idea of losing climbs that are already established. These areas are gathering places for climbers and are part of the history of the local climbing communities. I think culture is something this country lacks. Losing parts of climbing culture would be a shame.

Thank you,
