Comments: Hello USFS,

I am writing to support climbing management plans in Wilderness and all public lands. I just do not think that an opaque MRA is the appropriate tool. Who is to say if one particular bolt on a granite some way out in Darrington, WA is the minimum required to have a primitive wilderness experience? Since this policy change has no funding source attached, why wouldn't an MRA just never be completed or blanket denied until there are resources to review? I would like a system that works more closely with Local Climbing Organizations and other Conservation groups to give more context to a particular area, has transparency, and volunteer support.

Staunton State Park has a fantastic Climbing Management and Fixed Anchor program and I think it would be worthy if expanding to other public lands!

Thank you for your time,
