Comments: Dear USFS,

My name is Rochelle Russo. I am a native to Colorado, but did not find the outdoors until an adult. Once I found climbing, all of my questions started being answered. Climbing has changed my life and is one of the most important things in my life.

Thanks to climbing organizations, 60 years of sustainable Wilderness climbing exists. These people have poured their lives into educating climbers on appropriate land and nature etiquette, a topic not taken lightly in the climbing world. More experienced climbers are able to educate the masses on good land etiquette, respecting private property, being aware of wildlife restrictions, and communicating necessary information when heading into and up routes.

There's no question, the numbers show climbing is here to stay. Please do not make this recreation more dangerous by prohibiting access to areas we need,

*Fixed anchors are an essential piece of climbers' safety system and are not prohibited "installations" under the Wilderness Act. Following existing climbing policies that allow judicious use of fixed anchors for more than a half century will do more to protect Wilderness character while providing for primitive and unconfined Wilderness climbing.

*It is unreasonable for federal agencies to create new guidance policies prohibiting Wilderness climbing anchors across the country when they have allowed, managed, and authorized fixed anchors for decades.

*Prohibiting fixed anchors will create safety issues by imposing unnecessary obstacles to the regular maintenance of fixed anchors, a responsibility undertaken by the climbing community. Critical safety decisions often must be made in the moment and any authorization process should not impede those decisions. Fixed anchor maintenance needs to be managed in a way that incentivizes safe anchor replacement and does not risk the removal of climbing routes.

*Prohibiting fixed anchors obstructs appropriate exploration of Wilderness areas. Land managers need to allow climbers to explore Wilderness in a way that permits in-the-moment decisions that are necessary when navigating complex vertical terrain.

*Prohibiting fixed anchors will threaten America's rich climbing legacy and could erase some of the world's greatest climbing achievements. Climbing management policy needs to protect existing routes from removal.

*Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.

Thank you for your time,
Rochelle Russo
