

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 1/12/2024 4:22:11 AM

First name: Sofia

Last name: Dietrick

Organization:

Title:

Comments: This policy seems seriously misguided. Climbers have historically been advocates for the wilderness. Climbing in and of itself has negligible impact if compared to other outdoor human activities. Why not limit the number of people who come to the NP just to drive and see and take a photo or the number of day hiker on super popular trails instead. These people tend to be less informed about the land and wilderness they visit I am a very active member and a volunteer at the Mountaineers and much of my learning about the wilderness, the native people it belongs to, the conservation trends and concerns comes from this climbing organization. Before I joined this organization I was on my own adventuring clueless about my impact and safety.. I am so seriously concerned about safety and the impact this might have on climber safety.