Comments: I do not wish this to be implemented, as I do not believe that adequate resources are being given to the permitting process, and it therefore would be too easy to essentially blanket ban any bolting of any routes (through either lack of desire to issue permits, or willful negligence to do so).

I am a lifelong enjoyer of national parks and an enthusiastic rock climber, and I would argue that bolting does little to deface nature in the face of letting people intimately experience that nature. If anything, paving a single road or placing any parking lot in any wilderness would cause untold environmental damage compared to all the bolting that could ever be in the area combined.

I urge this not be implemented, because I would like to continue participating in our natural environment, with assurance that dedicated and passionate people have helped and will continue to help expand those opportunities.
