Comments: There are more critical issues, such as unauthorized and dangerous land use, that should occupy the Forest Service's time and money. In my region, fires are regularly started by people illegally using Forest Service land to shoot for fun. We who live here are told there isn't money enough to monitor the area and enforce the obvious prohibition against shooting mere feet from a public roadway. How on earth is there funding to write proposals like this, but none to meet immediate needs of precious and mistreated lands? I doubt Tucson is the only place where misguided efforts are blinding people to clear and present dangers that deserve a careful plan of action. Whatever those issues are across the nation, they aren't subordinate to bolts and anchors. Focus on what matters and put real fires out, please.
