

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 1/18/2024 6:10:34 PM

First name: Jed

Last name: Kravitz

Organization:

Title:

Comments: To whom it may concern,

Climbing has been a huge part of my life for the past 15 years. It is a healthy outlet to the outdoors that has changed my life and many others. To prohibit fixed anchors in the wilderness would take away from so many people and could result in serious safety concerns. Here are some more reasons why I believe we should not prohibit fixed anchors:

Fixed anchors are an essential piece of climbers' safety system and are not prohibited "installations" under the Wilderness Act. Following existing climbing policies that allow judicious use of fixed anchors for more than a half century will do more to protect Wilderness character while providing for primitive and unconfined Wilderness climbing.

It is unreasonable for federal agencies to create new guidance policies prohibiting Wilderness climbing anchors across the country when they have allowed, managed, and authorized fixed anchors for decades.

Prohibiting fixed anchors will create safety issues by imposing unnecessary obstacles to the regular maintenance of fixed anchors, a responsibility undertaken by the climbing community. Critical safety decisions often must be made in the moment and any authorization process should not impede those decisions. Fixed anchor maintenance needs to be managed in a way that incentivizes safe anchor replacement and does not risk the removal of climbing routes.

Prohibiting fixed anchors obstructs appropriate exploration of Wilderness areas. Land managers need to allow climbers to explore Wilderness in a way that permits in-the-moment decisions that are necessary when navigating complex vertical terrain.

Prohibiting fixed anchors will threaten America's rich climbing legacy and could erase some of the world's greatest climbing achievements. Climbing management policy needs to protect existing routes from removal.

Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.

Please take the time to realize that eliminating fixed anchors would have a seriously negative impact on a large amount of people. This is a sport that we loved and we want to be allowed to enjoy the wilderness in our own special way which is climbing. This is not hurting anyone else so I do not feel that it should be prohibited. Thank you for taking the time to read my comments.