Comments: In regards to the draft policies that would make fixed anchors (bolts, pitons, slings) prohibited in America's Wilderness areas that would overturn nearly 60 years of sustainable Wilderness climbing precedent and impact some of America's most iconic climbs, I have suggestions for improvements to the guidance: Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers. Non-Wilderness climbing management policy should maintain opportunities for new anchors unless and until analyses determine climbing should be restricted to protect cultural and natural resources.
