Comments: We live on a planet which is suffering daily from misuse by its human inhabitants. We do not need to put further stress upon more areas for the interests of the few. It is beholden on us to prevent any more intrusion on areas where wildlife seeks life and refuge. We are at a crossroads at this time, where our inability to protect our planet and its wildlife has become more and more apparent. We are the intruders who do not seem to understand the vital need of each species and habitat we thoughtlessly invade. Recreation is no excuse for the pollution we leave behind on beaches, in marshlands and forests. Until such time as humans can take a responsible and honest approach to the lands and waterways, no further incursions should occur.
