Comments: The prohibition of fixed anchors is a mistake and should not go through. The reality is that even if this were to be passed, the people who care about this sport are going to continue to participate in it regardless making it increasingly dangerous without the failsafe of some of these necessary fixed anchors. Furthermore, the funds and staffing required for the removal of pre-existing anchors is realistically unfeasible. Finally the passage of something like this has the potential of reigniting/ increasing the feud between outdoor recreationists and the governing bodies that care for these areas that we care so much about. This proposal has brought our community together to discuss how we govern ourselves and highlighted our need of more accountability within our communities to regulate ourselves and maintain our sport more effectively in order to maintain safety and environmental sustainability. However, this action puts the outlying mistakes of our sports in the spot light, which does not accurately represent the majority of our sports. Overall, this is an ineffective method of encouraging environmental sustainability, within these wild areas. It is as well as a misuse of governmental power to try to solve a non-issue in the grand scheme of environmental issues that threaten our beloved parks and wilderness areas.
