Comments: The Biden Administration's proposal to revise the forest service management plan to end logging of old growth forests in the US is a sound one. In addition to preserving these trees (which cannot be easily or quickly replaced), doing so help with carbon management, which helps offset the terrible effects of climate change.

This protection should extend to mature trees as well, not just the old growth forests.

The country's forests are under attack from drought, fires, and other climate change effects, as well as insect infestations and widespread diseases.

If we don't have trees, we don't have oxygen.

Preserve the forests!
