Comments: Please rethink what this fixed anchor ban will truly accomplish. Fixed anchors have next to no environmental impact. You are effectively destroying our sport for nearly no gain. Every climber I know is a huge steward of the environment, and takes greater care about their impact than the average person. We choose to spend a significant period of our time in these places, and want to keep them clean and preserve their natural beauty. Climbers and non-climbing recreators want the same thing, and an anchor ban will not accomplish that. Alternatively, I do not believe you have the resources to enforce an approval system, as anchors can be difficult to reach to assess, and are completely dictated by the nature of a route, the rock, and their locations. Truly decide if you have the man power and capabilities to enforce this. As a lifelong climber, thank you for giving us a voice and listening.
