Comments: Hello there. I am an avid outdoorsman, skier, mountain biker, climber. I work for a conservation corps and deeply understand the connection between the public and federal land management agencies. I have worked in wilderness areas and understand the impact of human presence can have on these special places. What I know for certain is we do not need more bureaucratic red tape to manage these climbing areas. Land management agencies are currently understaffed and under-budgeted. Adding to an already overflowing plate will only create chaos and headaches for land managers and climbers alike. Climbing is about exploration, our wild areas are here to inspire us to protect and take action and interest in them. Limiting climber's abilities to establish new routes will only lead to increased dissociation from our natural world when we need to continue to intertwine our every fiber to it to protect it. No one will care about a place they cannot connect to, we need people in all sports to experience our natural landscapes so they care about them and take an interest in their longevity!! Stop with the brutal government control!
