

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 1/29/2024 8:34:05 PM

First name: Ezra

Last name: Dowling

Organization:

Title:

Comments: As climbers I think I can safely say that we all want the wilderness to be its natural state. Climbing in wilderness is some of m best memories and trips I have been on. While most routes in wilderness have almost no bolts on them. The ones I have come across have been when bolts are necessary to make the route as safe as possible. And those have all been on Repel anchors. I believe when it comes to decent anchors that bolts in most cases to be the safest and most sustainable. They last a very long time. It stops people from using things like trees and shrubs as anchors. But it's also limits the drag the rope puts on the rock. They are also the safest method of decent. Making it so everyone has a straight forward way down. I also think that many routes should be left as they are. History is very important to the spirit of climbing. Marveling at what has been achieved by the generations before us. And again. Most of those routes are free from bolts.

I hope you can see that as climbers we want the same thing. To be able to go into these places and have our adventures and leave as little impact as possible. Thank you.