Comments: I am in favor of regulation to help manage the impact of climbing in wilderness (and non-wilderness) areas. But this will be a disaster. The flood of demand for anchor replacement and development will overwhelm the federal agencies involved. Having fixed anchors helps improve safety, making rapid a safe descent possible. Not all fixed anchors are created equally. Allowing bolts reduces the amount of old webbing and rope that is left all over a rock face by consolidating use (similar to a trail). The impacts of anchors are miniscule compared to trail and campsite development. Overall, this is half baked and misguided. Please please please do not pass this. Work with people who actually understanding climbing and how to effectively mitigate its impacts and rework this.
