Comments: I am writing to give me thoughts about the fixed anchors and bolts in national parks and wilderness areas that's is being reviewed at this moment. Bolts and fixed anchors are a very important aspect of rock climbing and keeping rock climbing safe in this areas. Rock climbing has been going on for decades in these wilderness areas and there is a strong vibrant history of it that has created an amazing culture and community to be a part of. Restricting this bolts and fixed anchors would be the start of destroying this amazing history and continued way to interact with out great outdoors. Rock climbing bolts and fixed anchors are small and frequently painted the color of the rock to blend in. Individuals passing by these fixed anchors would not see them unless under close inspection and a trained eye. Banning these bolts would also be a safety hazard. Bolts are already in the wall and after a certain amount of years they need replacing to keep safe, which individual in our community volunteer there time and money to do so. Banning bolts would not allow us to replace these anchors and lead to dangerous situations. Rock climbing is an amazing way to adventure, explore beautiful wilderness areas, and interact with them in a healthy sustainable way. Putting a ban on bolts and fixed anchors would be a detriment to our society by stripping away our freedom to recreate in the great outdoors, and would put existing routes and rock climbers at danger going further! Rock climbing is a healthy activity, that is sustainable for the outdoors, and has a rich history, culture, and community that should be protected at all costs!
