Comments: It is imperative that fixed anchors and fixed equipment continue to be allowed and encouraged as they have been for decades. They are essential to safety and help make climbing faster as well as safer which can prevent congestion on popular climbs and help to avoid 'epics' when people end up climbing far longer than planned.

Climbers have a right to enjoy the land and are some of the most respectful towards wilderness areas, often volunteering to help create trails, clean litter and remove graffiti (which is entirely from NON climbers in my experience).

Nature time is important for people's health and relaxation and to deny climbers the experience of adventure in the great outdoors is cruel and unusual punishment.

Bolts are very difficult to see even when you are looking for them and so there is really every reason to continue to allow them. It is very important that you continue to support the great sport of climbing to protect the health and heritage of Americans.
