Comments: Fixed anchors significantly improve the safety of climbers, ensuring reliable and redundant protection. Changing policy to prohibit them when they have been allowed for decades will cause confusion and introduce risk for climbers. Climbing is an adventure sport with a rich history and the routes that contributed to the development of the sport rely on bolt protection to be done safely.

Restricting the establishment of new routes to "existing climbing opportunities" on non-Wilderness lands is unenforceable and will create confusion amongst land managers and climbers.
